
UCLA ENCYCLOPEDIA of EGYPTOLOGY

THEODICY «التيوديسية» (التحقيق في عدالة الأولوهية)

Roland Enmarch

EDITORS

WILLEKE WENDRICH

Editor-in-Chief

University of California, Los Angeles

JACCO DIELEMAN

Editor

Area Editor Religion

University of California, Los Angeles

ELIZABETH FROOD

Editor

University of Oxford

JOHN BAINES

Senior Editorial Consultant

University of Oxford

Short Citation:

Enmarch, 2008, Theodicy. UEE.

Full Citation:

Enmarch, Roland, 2008, Theodicy. In Jacco Dieleman and Willeke Wendrich (eds.), UCLA Encyclopedia of Egyptology, Los Angeles.

<http://digital2.library.ucla.edu/viewItem.do?ark=21198/zz000s3mj5>

1007 Version 1, April 2008

<http://digital2.library.ucla.edu/viewItem.do?ark=21198/zz000s3mj5>

THEODICY

«التيوديسية» (التحقيق في عدالة الأولوهية)

Roland Enmarch

Theodizee

Théodicée

Theodicy, the inquiry as to the justness of the divine, is a prominent theme in mythological descriptions of the struggle between order and chaos. It is also an important feature of Middle Egyptian pessimistic poetry, which probes weaknesses in this mythological argument. Although less explicitly articulated, theodicean concerns recur in Egyptian written culture down at least to the Greco-Roman Period.

«التيوديسية» ، او التحقيق في عدالة الأولوهية، موضوع بارز في الأوصاف الأسطورية للكفاح بين النظام والفوضى . هي أيضاً عنصر مهم للشعر المصري المتوسط المتشائم، الذي يتقصى الضعف في هذا الجدل الأسطوري. المخاوف «التيوديسية» استمرت في الثقافة المصرية المكتوبة حتى العصر اليوناني الروماني على الأقل و لكن تصور بأقل وضوح.

theodicy is an attempt to reconcile belief in divine justice with the existence of evil and suffering in the world. Although the term itself is recent (originally coined in a Judeo-Christian cultural context by Leibniz in 1710; see Laato and de Moor 2003: x), awareness of suffering and the problematization of evil are central to many diverse religious and philosophical traditions, including those of ancient Near Eastern cultures (Sitzler 1995).

Several areas of Egyptian written discourse (primarily mythological, literary, and biographical) explicitly address theodicean topics, advancing a range of theodicean positions. In Egyptian mythology, good and evil are respectively identified with cosmic order (Maat) and chaos (Isfet) (Assmann 1990), an opposition attested as early as the Old Kingdom, where it is featured in the Pyramid Texts (Loprieno 2003: 31 - 33, 44). Chaos preceded the creation of the ordered cosmos and continued to threaten its existence (Hornung 2005: 175 - 180). The divine world was not transcendent, but was engaged in this ongoing struggle to maintain order. In this scheme, evil and chaos were inherent features of the cosmos, and humanity's role was limited to the dutiful maintaining of maat on earth.

Another strand of theodicean discourse, which first becomes prominent in the Coffin Texts and in Middle Egyptian poetry, focuses more on the relationship between humanity and the divine. The deity whose justice is in question here usually assumes the role of solar creator god. According to these texts, humanity chose to behave chaotically and rebelled against the creator god despite his benevolent treatment of them. After defeating this rebellion, the creator god withdrew from direct contact with humanity; it is this distancing of the creator god that permits the existence of suffering in the world. Two of the clearest references to this rebellion are in the declaration of the creator god in Coffin Text spell 1130 (CT VII, 464b), first attested in the 11th Dynasty (Parkinson 2002: 131, note 1), and in the Book of the Heavenly Cow (Hornung 1997), a mythological text first attested in the late 18th Dynasty.

The interplay between the cosmic and anthropocentric conceptions of evil—in particular, the question of the balance between human and divine responsibility for suffering on earth—underlies most Egyptian theodicean discourse. In earlier periods the cosmic and political aspects of the struggle between order and chaos predominate, but as time progresses there is an increasing emphasis on the everyday human experience of imperfection and injustice in life on earth, and the reasons for it.

The Egyptians' essentially negative cosmology (for this term, see Assmann 1990: 201 - 222), and the negative evaluation of human nature arising from it, potentially absolved the gods of blame for the world's imperfections by inculcating humanity. Theodicean interpretations of divine action have implications for social structure and tend to encourage normative cultural and political values. From at least the Middle Kingdom onwards, theodicy formed the basis of the legitimation of the Pharaonic state, where strong and sometimes violent action on the part of the king was required in order to curb humanity's chaotic tendencies (Assmann 2000: 42; 2005: 19 - 23). In accordance with this cosmic framework, untoward political events in Egyptian history, such as rebellions (as in several Königsnovellen), the Hyksos dominion, or the defunct reforms of the Amarna period, were portrayed in subsequent royal inscriptions as aberrant outbreaks of chaotic behavior (Loprieno 2003: 47).

The correct human response to this state of affairs was to demonstrate conduct in accordance with the ideal of maat, one component of which was loyalty to the Egyptian state. In earlier periods, such behavior was assumed to lead to success in this life, as stressed, for example, in the Middle Egyptian Loyalist Teaching (text: Posener 1976; translation: Parkinson 1997: 239 - 240), and to being judged righteous after death. The concept of a posthumous moral judgment, attested most famously in Book of the Dead spell 125, forms another implicit theodicean argument: regardless of suffering in this life, good conduct would be rewarded by the gods in the next. Coffin Text spell 1130 underlines this by listing, as one of the creator god's four "good deeds" for humanity, the fact that he promoted piety by making them mindful of death (CT VII, 464d).

The comparatively peripheral role of literary discourse in Egyptian civilization enabled it to explore these theodicean themes in a freer and sometimes more critical fashion than was possible in mythological discourse. Literary texts were also free to concentrate on perceived moral injustices in everyday experience, rather than the abstract principles of cosmic order and disorder. Middle Egyptian poetry provides the most explicit examples (Parkinson 2002: 130 - 138), such as the Tale of the Eloquent Peasant, which explores issues of social justice that implicitly raise theodicean questions (Parkinson 2002: 173; Blumenthal 2004: 11 - 14). Another Middle Egyptian poem, the Teaching for Merikare (text: Quack 1992; translation: Parkinson 1997: 212 - 234), culminates in a hymn to the creator god who asserts his care for suffering humanity ("When they weep, he is listening": Merikare E135), yet also portrays the creator as a stern father "slaying his son for the sake of his brother" (Merikare E137-138). Suffering, even if it seems inexplicably harsh to humanity, thus serves a higher divine purpose, becoming the creator's tool for chastising his errant creations' behavior (Assmann 2000: 106 - 108; Assmann 2001: 174; but see alternative interpretations referenced in Parkinson 2002: 131).

The most direct critique of this view of the creator god occurs in another Middle Egyptian poem, the Dialogue of Ipuwer and the Lord of All (text: Enmarch 2005; translation:

Parkinson 1997: 166 - 199), where a human sage accuses the creator god of being too distant from human affairs and of not distinguishing the meek from the fierce. The implication is that it is the fault of the creator if the creation is deficient. An underlying question is whether human beings are condemned by fate to behave chaotically and receive punishment (as is implied in Merikare), or whether they have free will (Otto 1951, 1966; Fecht 1972: 128 - 130), a theme more directly addressed in later periods (on destiny and free will, see Baines 1994: 40 - 45; Vernus 1995: 122 - 132). Although Ipwewer focuses on problematic aspects of normative ideology, it does not ultimately undermine that ideology but instead forms a plea for closer and more discriminating divine (and royal) intervention in the world, to ensure that justice really is done.

Direct theodicean challenges to divine justice appear less frequently from the New Kingdom onwards. The 18th Dynasty solar hymns emphasize instead the all-encompassing benevolence of the creator god, while the theology of Amarna ascribed evil to the nightly absence of the Aten, expressed most extensively in the Great Hymn to the Aten (Sandman 1938: 93 - 96; Lorton 1993). One feature of the major changes in Egyptian religious decorum in the post-Amarna period was the greater emphasis on the personal relationship between non-royal individuals and the gods. The existence of evil and suffering was not denied, but individuals increasingly placed their faith in a specific divine patron and protector who would prevent anything bad happening specifically to them (as in the biography of Simut-Kyky: text: Negm 1997, pls. 44 - 63; translation: Froot 2007: 84 - 89). Human afflictions, in this life and the next, were a divine punishment for bad behavior, requiring contrition and forgiveness (Galán 1999). There is also a greater emphasis on divine intervention, rather than loyalty to the king, as the only guarantee of success (Assmann 2005: 93 - 112). Perhaps inevitable consequences of this shift include an increasing emphasis on the inscrutable nature of divine action and a recognition that good conduct will not necessarily lead to earthly success. This tendency develops over time, occurring for example in the Teaching of Amenemope (text: Laisney 2007; English translation: Lichtheim 1976: 146 - 163), and is expressed most pervasively in the Demotic Wisdom Book, of which the main manuscript is Papyrus Insinger (text: Lexa 1926; Volten 1941; English translation: Lichtheim 1980: 184 - 217; German translation: Thissen 1991: 280 - 319).

The Demotic Chronicle (text: Spiegelberg 1914; translation: Felber 2002: 75 - 90; see also Assmann 2002: 378, note 10), in contrast, reasserts the connection between human action and divine retribution in its reading of the history of Dynasties 28 - 30: pious kings live out their time and are succeeded by their sons, while impious kings are usurped or have their reigns cut short. This text also illustrates the decline in status of royalty, who are treated simply as individuals being judged by the gods for their adherence, no longer to maat (cosmic order), but to the hep, the law as a body of rules and guidelines laid down in writing (for one of the earliest references to a hep of kingship, see Merikare E138). Foreign domination in the first millennium BCE was possibly a factor in the development of prophetic texts, such as the Oracle of the Lamb (Zauzich 1983: 165 - 174; Thissen 2002: 115 - 119), that predict future calamity in the form of foreign rule followed by the restoration, in a distant future, of a golden age of indigenous Egyptian culture (Assmann 2002: 382, note 23). This reading of the texts as evidence for Egyptian anti-foreign sentiments has, however, found limited acceptance, and some of these texts may alternatively be understood as attempts by Egyptian writers to come to terms with a rapidly changing international context, in which traditional Egyptian royal and cosmic ideology needed reformulating (Felber 2002: 106 - 110; Thissen 2002: 134 - 136; Blasius and Schipper 2002: 294 - 298). However these predictions are interpreted, the deferral of the advent of cosmic justice to an unspecified future date nevertheless constitutes another implicit theodicy

(Loprieno 2003: 55) that may be compared in thematic terms with the apocalyptic literature widespread in the Hellenistic and Roman Mediterranean—just as similar comparisons can be made between other Egyptian written genres (such as “Instructions”) and classical literature (Lichtheim 1983). Though it therefore seems plausible, it is not currently possible to conclusively demonstrate a closer link between the Egyptian theodicean tradition and those of contemporary and subsequent cultures (however, see Frankfurter 1993: 176 - 194).

Bibliographic Notes

The most recent overview of theodicy in Egypt is Loprieno (2003), which forms a chapter in a magisterial volume usefully surveying theodicean literature in the Bible, together with similar texts produced in neighbouring ancient Near Eastern and classical cultures. See also the more intensively cross-cultural comparative study by Sitzler (1995).

The “reproach to god” (Vorwurf an Gott) theme in Middle Egyptian literature was first discussed in detail by Otto (1951, 1966), followed by Fecht’s in-depth discussion of that theme in one specific text, the Dialogue of Ipuwer and the Lord of All (1972). The theme has also been explored in other Middle Egyptian poems, e.g., Blumenthal (2004). The most thorough recent discussion has been Parkinson’s (2002: 130 - 138). See also Lorton (1993) for a comparison of Middle Egyptian poetic theodicies and Amarna theology.

The standard edition of the Book of the Heavenly Cow by Hornung (1997) discusses the theodicean sections of that text, while the 6th edition (2005) of his now classic study on Egyptian conceptions of god also touches on theodicy. Assmann has published a large number of important works on Egyptian political theology (2000, 2001, 2002, 2005), including the concept of maat (1990). A number of contributions on prophetic and apocalyptic literature from the Greco-Roman Period, much of which has theodicean overtones, can be found in Blasius and Schipper’s edited volume (2002).

References

Assmann, Jan

1990 Ma'at: Gerechtigkeit und Unsterblichkeit im alten Ägypten. Munich: C. H. Beck.

2000 Herrschaft und Heil: Politische Theologie in Altägypten, Israel und Europa. Munich: C. Hanser.

2001 The search for God in ancient Egypt. Translated by David Lorton. Ithaca: Cornell University Press.

2002 The mind of Egypt: History and meaning in the time of the pharaohs. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.

2005 Theologie und Weisheit im alten Ägypten. Munich: W. Fink.

Baines, John

1994 Contexts of fate: Literature and practical religion. In The unbroken reed: Studies in the culture and heritage of ancient Egypt in honour of A. F. Shore, Occasional Papers 11, ed. Christopher Eyre, Anthony Leahy, and Lisa Montagno Leahy, pp. 35 - 52. London: Egypt Exploration Society.

Blasius, Andreas, and Bernd Schipper

2002 Apokalyptik und Ägypten? Erkenntnisse und Perspektiven. In Apokalyptik und Ägypten: Eine kritische Analyse der relevanten Texte aus dem griechisch-römischen Ägypten, Orientalia Lovaniensia Analecta 107, ed. Andreas Blasius, and Bernd Schipper, pp. 277 - 302. Leuven: Peeters.

Blumenthal, Elke

- 2004 Der Vorwurf an Rensi: Gott und Mensch in den "Klagen des Bauern." Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache und Altertumskunde 131, pp. 1 - 22.

Enmarch, Roland

- 2005 The Dialogue of Ipuwer and the Lord of All. Oxford: Griffith Institute.

Fecht, Gerhard

- 1972 Der Vorwurf an Gott in den "Mahnworten des Ipu-wei" (Papyrus Leiden I 344 recto, 11, 11 - 13, 8; 15, 13 - 17, 3): Zur geistigen Krise der ersten Zwischenzeit und ihrer Bewältigung. Abhandlungen der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philosophisch-Historische Klasse 1972/1. Heidelberg: C. Winter.

Felber, Heinz

- 2002 Die Demotische Chronik. In Apokalyptik und Ägypten: Eine kritische Analyse der relevanten Texte aus dem griechisch-römischen Ägypten, Orientalia Lovaniensia Analecta 107, ed. Andreas Blasius, and Bernd Schipper, pp. 65 - 111. Leuven: Peeters.

Frankfurter, David

- 1993 Elijah in Upper Egypt: The apocalypse of Elijah and early Egyptian Christianity. Studies in Antiquity and Christianity. Minneapolis: Fortress Press.

Frood, Elizabeth

- 2007 Writings from the ancient world: Biographical texts from Ramessid Egypt. Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature.

Galán, José

- 1999 Seeing darkness. Chronique d'Égypte (Bulletin périodique de la fondation égyptologique Reine Élisabeth) 74, pp. 18 - 30.

Hornung, Erik

- 1997 Der ägyptische Mythos von der Himmelskaub: Eine ätiologie des Unvollkommenen, 3rd edition. Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis 46. Fribourg: Academic Press; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck and Ruprecht.

- 2005 Der Eine und die Vielen: Altägyptische Götterwelt, 6th edition. Primus: Darmstadt.

Laato, Antti, and Johannes de Moor

- 2003 Introduction. In Theodicy in the world of the Bible, ed. Antti Laato, and Johannes de Moor, pp. vii - liv. Leiden: Brill.

Laisney, Vincent Pierre-Michel

- 2007 L'Enseignement d'Aménémopé. Studia Pohl (Series Maior) 19. Rome: Pontificio Istituto Biblico.

Lexa, Frantisek

- 1926 Papyrus Insinger: Les enseignements moraux d'un scribe égyptien du premier siècle après J.C. Paris: Geuthner.

Lichtheim, Miriam

- 1976 Ancient Egyptian literature: A book of readings, Volume II: The New Kingdom. Berkeley, Los Angeles, and London: University of California Press.

- 1980 Ancient Egyptian literature: A book of readings, Volume III: The Late Period. Berkeley, Los Angeles, and London: University of California Press.

- 1983 Late Egyptian wisdom literature in the international context: A study of demotic instructions. Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis 52. Fribourg: Academic Press.

Loprieno, Antonio

- 2003 Theodicy in ancient Egyptian texts. In Theodicy in the world of the Bible, ed. A. Laato, and J. C. de Moor, pp. 27 - 56. Leiden: Brill.

Lorton, David

- 1993 God's beneficent creation: Coffin texts spell 1130, The Instructions for Merikare, and The Great Hymn to the Aton. Studien zur Altägyptischen Kultur 20, pp. 125 - 155.

Negm, Maged

- 1997 The tomb of Simut called Kyky: Theban tomb 409 at Qurnab. Warminster: Aris and Phillips.

Otto, Eberhard

- 1951 Der Vorwurf an Gott: Zur Entstehung der ägyptischen Auseinandersetzungsliteratur. Vorträge der orientalischen Tagung in Marburg: Ägyptologie. Hildesheim: Gerstenberg.
- 1966 Ägyptische Gedanken zur menschlichen Verantwortung. Die Welt des Orients: Wissenschaftliche Beiträge zur Kunde des Morgenlandes 3, pp. 19 - 26.

Parkinson, Richard

- 1997 The Tale of Sinuhe and other ancient Egyptian poems, 1940 - 1640 B.C. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- 2002 Poetry and culture in Middle Kingdom Egypt: A dark side to perfection. Athlone Publications in Egyptology and Ancient Near Eastern Studies. London: Continuum.

Posener, Georges

- 1976 L'enseignement loyaliste: Sagesse égyptienne du Moyen Empire. Hautes Études Orientales 5. Geneva: Droz.

Quack, Joachim

- 1992 Studien zur Lehre für Merikare. Göttinger Orientforschungen IV/23. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz Verlag.

Sandman, Maj

- 1938 Texts from the time of Akhenaten. Bibliotheca Aegyptiaca 8. Brussels: Fondation égyptologique Reine Élisabeth.

Sitzler, Dorothea

- 1995 Vorwurf gegen Gott: Ein religiöses Thema im Alten Orient (Ägypten und Mesopotamien). Studies in Oriental Religions 32. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.

Spiegelberg, Wilhelm

- 1914 Die sogenannte demotische Chronik des Pap. 215 der Bibliothèque nationale zu Paris nebst den auf der Rückseite des Papyrus stehenden Texten. Demotische Studien 7. Leipzig: J.C. Hinrichs.

Thissen, Heinz-Josef

- 1991 "Weisheitstexte" in ägyptischer Sprache: Die Lehre des Anchescheschonqi; Die Lehre des P. Louvre 2414; Die Lehre des P. Insinger. In Texte aus der Umwelt des Alten Testaments III/2, ed. Günter Burkard, Ingo Kottsieper, Irene Shirun-Grumach, Heike Sternberg-el Hotabi, and Heinz-Josef Thissen, pp. 251 - 319. Gütersloh: G. Mohn.
- 2002 Das Lamm des Bokchoris. In Apokalyptik und Ägypten: Eine kritische Analyse der relevanten Texte aus dem griechisch-römischen Ägypten, Orientalia Lovaniensia Analecta 107, ed. Andreas Blasius, and Bernd Schipper, pp. 113 - 138. Leuven: Peeters.

Vernus, Pascal

- 1995 Essai sur la conscience de l'histoire dans l'Égypte pharaonique. Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études 332. Paris: H. Champion.

Volten, Aksel

- 1941 Das demotische Weisheitsbuch: Studien und Bearbeitung. Analecta Aegyptiaca 2. Copenhagen: E. Munksgaard.

Zauzich, Karl-Theodor

- 1983 Das Lamm des Bokchoris. In Papyrus Erzherzog Rainer (P. Rainer Cent.): Festschrift zum 100-jährigen Bestehen der Papyrussammlung der österreichischen Nationalbibliothek, ed. Josef Zessner-Spitzenberg, pp. 165 - 174. Vienna: Hollinek.